ALL SORTS.

Henry W. Lucas, Postmaster at Silver City, N. M., is missing.

The wife of Billy Hill presented him a boy in Empire Thursday.

The Mid-Winter Appeal can be purchased of John G. Fox or Cagwin & Noteware for 5 cents a copy.

The color line was drawn at a mass quade hall in the Southwest, when a negro attended in a fine costume. All went merry until the unmasking. Then he was kicked in seventeen places and thrown into jail.

A Stockton attorney put through the Probate Court, settled up and distributed among the heirs, an estate, within three days after the death of the owner and testator. It is expected that the proceedings for his disbursement will soon be begun.

The Enterprise says that 600 men are employed on the Comstock. The Chronicle indignantly throttles the statement, declaring it injuriously, maliciously and biliously false, and then goes on to prove that the Enterprise is nearly correct.—Townsend.

A Mountainside in Motion.

Sacramento, Cal., Jan. 16.—About noon to-day an immense landslide occurred between Alta and Towel's Station on the Central Pacific road over the mountains, covering 300 feet of the railroad track. The great body of earth came down like an immense glacier, moving at a rate of 60 feet an hour. Its downward course was noticed by persons in the vicinity for many hours before the mountain finally lodged at the base of the grade. Stalwart pines moved with the mass of earth, keeping their upright position all the way down.

When the branches of the pines struck the telegraph wires they were leveled along with the poles and buried beneath the sliding mountainside.

Colonel Wright, of the railroad company, at once ordered out a large force of men to relieve the track of its burden of earth and trees. It is expected that it will take all night to clear the track, meanwhile it is not known how the landslide will affect the movement of trains. This is the first landslide occurring in the vicinity for many years.

Punished Enough.

Governor Markham has decided that he will not commute the sentence of John McNulty, sentenced to be hanged on the 26th on January, 1894, in San Francisco, for the murder of John Collins. The murder was committed nearly six years ago.

McNulty has been more fearfully punished for his crime than any murderer in the annals of crime. He must be a very strong minded man, or the mental anguish he has undergone would have unbalanced his intellect. This man has been punished enough, and should be set free.

Wool and Wit.

The Philadelphia Times dramatic critic writes as follows of the Barrow Brothers Minstrel Company, to appear at the Opera House next Friday evening: This combination came here flushed with the success of its recent New York tour and is unanimously endorsed as one of the greatest companies of vaudeville and operatic talent ever organized. This company includes some noted European performers, and gives a refined entertainment without any offensive features.

Big Bid for the Fight.

Helena, Mon., Jan. 15.—Leading Montana sporting men, believing that the Corbett-Mitchell fight cannot be pulled off in Florida, are out with a bid. At a meeting of several wealthy stock-growers, it was decided to offer a herd of three thousand range cattle, worth thirty dollars a head to have the fight in Helena. There is no danger of interference from officers. Inside of three years the herd of cattle would be worth a quarter of a million.

McAuliffe Wins.

San Francisco, Jan. 16.—Jack McAuliffe, the champion lightweight of the world, defeated Jim Ryan, the Champion of Australia, in a six-round go tonight. The exhibition was tame and the impression prevailed that Ryan could have made a better showing had he been so disposed.

OPENING THE MINING CAMP.

It is One of the Most Attractive Concessions at the Fair.

The San Francisco Chronicle has the following about the '49 Camp.

There were at the Exposition yesterday very few people who did not plod their way out to the Mining Camp. They were well rewarded for their pains. They caught a glimpse of the olden days in California. They saw the rough and ready men who dared anything in their search for gold. They saw the gambling house of the camp in full operation, and saw the eager play of Mexicans and miners around the table. They heard the old stage coach rattle down the street, and deposit its human freight of prospectors. They heard the sharp report of pistols mingling with the music of banjos and violins, and then saw the form of some desperado dragged from the dance hall where his presence had made slight interruption to the festivities within. Around them they saw life and action, snap and energy. The motley crowd of the camp, Spaniards, Mexicans, miners and gamblers, mingled with the crowd who came to see them. It was the opening day of the camp, and its silent street was transformed into a scene which not a few had witnessed when they themselves took part in its changes.

At 1 o'clock the old stage coach stopped at the Administration building. In a few minutes the Director-General, the members of the executive committee and a few other invited guests piled in. There was little ceremony about it, as they have none in connection with the camp. It rumbled down the street and stopped at the dance hall. The evening were not there ten minutes before the Justice of the Peace killed a man. He was undoubtedly in the right and killed four more before the afternoon was over. Those who observed with any care might have noticed that he killed the same man three times.

Every time the shots rang out it was in the midst of a dance. The pretty Spaniards, girls and men, were at the prettiest part of one of their graceful dances. The musicians were drumming away or singing to their own accompaniment. The sound of the castanets, the movements of the gayly-robed figures, the hum of conversation and laughter made it an exceptionally attractive picture.

Changes come as they did in the days of old. Two riders drove their horses into the dance hall and without the formality of dismounting demanded drinks. They got them, but they were milder than those served when mining camps were run in stern, sober earnest and not in play.

The dance hall was of course, the leading attraction. The dancers are pretty and graceful. They dance the old Spanish dances well. Their costumes are the picturesque ones which have faded into the past. The girls won sincere applause for their efforts, but somehow there seemed little of show in it all. In the camp everybody enters into the spirit of the time it pictures. Claims are being jumped and miners are ready to defend them. The newspaper publishes the sentiments of its proprietors in the old-fashioned and startlingly frank way. The "hotel" is open and ready for business and one may expect to find there nothing he could not find in '49. As a feature of interest the camp will need no praise.

Registering Chinese.

J. A. Hoegh, United States Deputy Internal Revenue Collector, is in Reno and will remain a few days, after which he will go to Carson, to receive applications for Chinese registration under the Act of May 5, 1892, as amended Nov. 3, 1893. All applicants must provide themselves with two photographs of their face, the size of the picture not to exceed 2 1/2 by 3 inches. All Chinese who do not avail themselves of this opportunity to register will have to apply at the Collector's or Deputy Collector's office, as no officer will again visit this locality.

The Hard Times Party.

The hard times party at Odd Fellows' Hall tonight for the benefit of the Catholic Church, will be an event hard to forget. It will be hard times all through, except the music. Just put on your old clothes and enjoy yourself. Any gent wearing a "spike-tail" coat will be fined $5.

Card From Dr. Guinan.

Carson, January 17, 1894.

ED. APPEAL, DEAR SIR:—A couple of months since, a boy in San Francisco, during an excitement caused by fire in the school building, carried a lame girl, who was paralyzed by fright, down stairs. This was an act of heroism and was so considered by all who heard the story.

The boy was subsequently presented a medal for bravery and Mr. Tiburcio Parrott gave as his individual testimonial of admiration for the lad's bravery, a twenty dollar piece.

Last evening in the Tribune and this morning in the APPEAL, I read the account of the heroism of the little Crow boy of Brunswick Mill. It occurred to me that while there might be a basis of fact in the story on, that there was much exaggeration about it.

Today I happened to have business in Empire and I took occasion to inquire into the matter and ascertained that instead of your accounts being exaggerated, they fell a little short of the actual facts in the case. There are nine children in the Crow family and seven of them were in the water, including the little hero. After having rescued five of them, the brave lad found that a baby brother of about four years was missing and he knew that he must have gone under the ice.

The water at this point was about 12 or 14 feet deep. He dove under the ice, found the little one and swam down the stream about 40 feet, where he knew there was no ice, in consequence of the rapids. At this point the water is about two feet deep and he made a landing on his feet. He was so exhausted that it was all he could do to raise and keep the little one's head above water. At this juncture two men came upon the scene, in answer to the cries for help by the boy's mother, and jumped in and carried the young hero and the rescued little one to the shore.

In my estimation this is one of the greatest acts of heroism on the part of a little boy (or for a man even) on record. As compared with the act of the San Francisco boy, it seems to me one hundred fold more so.

I move you that we raise a purse, as a testimonial for the bravery of little Crow. Inasmuch as many will want to show their regard for such an unsurpassed act of courage the individual contributions need not be much, to have the aggregate a respectable purse. I will therefore start the ball rolling by putting in 4 bits. Respectfully,

J. GUINAN.

A Purse for Crow.

Dr. Guinan thinks that Crow the brave little fellow who saved five lives at Empire should be presented a purse.

He heads the list with 50 cents, the APPEAL a like amount, and Chas. Wilson and Parson Davis throw in half a dollar each. There ought to be at least 200 50-cent subscriptions by Sunday.
